

WHY THERE IS ONLY THE QUICK & THE DEAD - Part 2

We recently blogged about the importance of acting quickly in pursuing accident claims. Whilst we don't wish to harp on the point, we felt it worthy of further comment.

The law has put in place time limits for claims for a reason – because with the passage of time, people pass away, move away, forget, or have their recollections coloured by that passage of time. There is nothing like the fresh recollection of events.

Recently we have seen cases where it has been necessary to prosecute a claim through the courts, only to be faced with the problem of a disappearing driver! If liability is disputed by the other party, your driver's evidence will be essential to winning the case!

How to get over this problem? Again, the swift prosecution of all claims, no matter how straight forward they might seem is advised. Detailed diagrams and statements are also recommended.

We can't place enough emphasis on acting quickly, though, by engaging your expert recoveries specialist to ensure your best chances of success.

In fact, we were recently commended by a court for our speed! There's only the quick and the dead. We prefer quick, thank you.
